

THE UNIVERSITY OF SYDNEY

Do you support a family member who lives alone?

Is your family member experiencing changes in their thinking or memory or do they have dementia?

You are invited to take part in research

Researchers at The University of Sydney are conducting a study to understand the experience of living alone for people who have changes in their thinking or memory or who have dementia.

This research will identify people's priorities and discuss their unmet needs.

You are invited to participate in an interview for this study to talk about supporting someone with cognitive impairment who lives alone. Interviews will be online, face to face or over the phone. The interviews will take approximately 1 hour, at a time that is convenient to you.

This research project has been approved by The University of Sydney Human Research Ethics Committee (2025/HE001469). Participation is completely voluntary and confidential.

FOR MORE INFORMATION CONTACT

Lucie Downer
The University of Sydney
Lucie.downer@sydney.edu.au
(02) 9351 9700

